

Speak Up for Better Sexual and Reproductive Health Services

Did You Know? You Can Help Influence How Your County Invests In Sexual and Reproductive Health.

Every five years, counties prepare a County Integrated Development Plan (CIDP). This plan guides how county resources are allocated and which services are prioritized including sexual and reproductive health services.

When communities participate in the planning and budgeting process, they help ensure that county investments respond to the real health needs of women, men, adolescents and families.

Why Should Sexual and Reproductive Health Be a Priority?

Everyone deserves access to quality sexual and reproductive health services throughout their lives.

Investing in SRHR helps to:

- ✓ Keep mothers and babies healthy
- ✓ Reduce maternal and newborn deaths
- ✓ Prevent teenage pregnancies
- ✓ Promote access to family planning
- ✓ Prevent HIV and other sexually transmitted infections
- ✓ Detect cervical and breast cancer early
- ✓ Prevent and respond to gender-based violence
- ✓ Ensure young people have access to age-appropriate health information and services
- ✓ Build healthier families and stronger communities

What Should the County Invest In?

Communities can advocate for county plans and budgets to prioritize:

- ✓ Quality maternal and newborn healthcare
- ✓ Family planning information and services
- ✓ Adolescent and youth-friendly health services
- ✓ Prevention and response to gender-based violence
- ✓ HIV prevention, testing and treatment
- ✓ Cervical and breast cancer screening
- ✓ Reproductive health medicines, equipment and supplies
- ✓ Community health workers and health promotion
- ✓ Men involved in health services
- ✓ Better-equipped health facilities

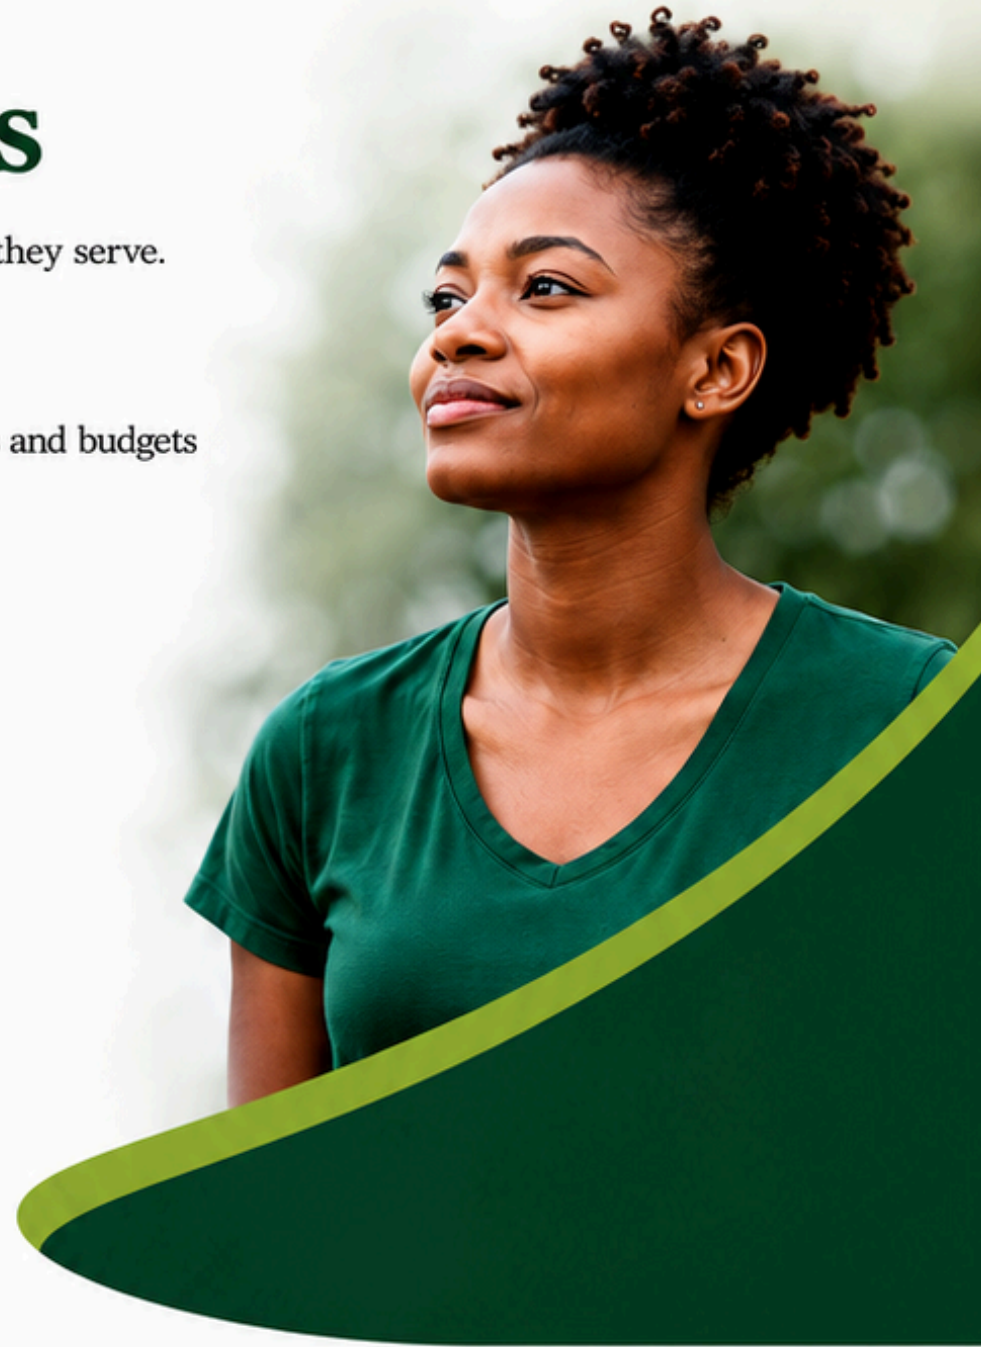

Your Voice Matters

County plans should reflect the health priorities of the people they serve.

You can help improve SRHR services by:

- Taking part in public participation meetings on county plans and budgets
- Speaking up about the reproductive health challenges facing your community
- Encouraging county leaders to invest more in sexual and reproductive health services

- Working with Community Health Promoters, youth groups and community organizations to identify local health priorities
 - Following up to ensure county commitments are implemented

Ask Your Leaders

During public participation meetings, ask:

- Is enough funding being allocated for sexual and reproductive health services?
- Will women, adolescents and vulnerable groups be able to access quality reproductive healthcare?
- Are there enough health workers, medicines and equipment to provide quality SRHR services?
- Is the county investing in family planning, maternal health and adolescent health programmes?
- How will the county measure progress in improving sexual and reproductive health?
- How will communities be involved in monitoring implementation?

Be Part of the Change

County development plans shape the health services available in our communities for years to come. When communities participate in planning, budgeting and monitoring, they help ensure that sexual and reproductive health services receive the attention, funding and support they deserve.
